2.2.1 The institution assesses the learning levels of the students and organizes special Programmes for advanced learners and slow learners

Slow Learner :

Teachers can identify that the student is a 'slow learner' with a careful observation. They could easily identify some of the signs of a 'slow learner' as follows:

1. Speech defect
2. Language development problem (broken sentences)
3. Assessments the level of vocabulary (vocabulary limited)
4. Verbal abilities
5. Short sentences, grammatically incorrect
6. Student Behavior
7. Spelling Mistake
8. Interaction with other students
9. Class room Discussion
10. Reading problem
11. Interest
12. Slow response/decision making.

Advance Learner :

One of the key ingredients to any successful educational experience for gifted learners is curriculum. Curriculum is the "what" that is taught-the knowledge and skills that are the goal of instruction. Teachers implement and present curriculum through various instructional strategies that include how students are grouped for instruction to the kinds of activities they engage in, to the types of assessment used to evaluate learning. Colleges often have a scope and sequence of topics they want to cover with students-one that is articulated across grades so that students build and acquire competencies, increase their knowledge, and move to more advanced levels of understanding as they grow and develop.
